In The Barstool Monologues, Nashville singer-songwriter Mike Cullison (aka "The Roadhouse Rambler") weaves the lives of bar patrons into songs, then threads those songs together with short spoken-word narratives to create a vivid musical tableau: There's the heartbroken lover, the fracturing couple, the other woman, the lonely imbiber ... each introduced by a bartender named Hollis who sees and hears it all. Various singers inhabit their personas, spinning musical novellas into what Cullison likes to describe as "a honky-tonk Canterbury Tales."

"It's as if you walked into a place and you took a snapshot and everybody's looking in the camera," says Mike. "What I wanted to do was place everybody in that picture into one of the songs, either as its subject or the person singing it to somebody else." With The Barstool Monologues, Mike Cullison has done just that.
